The earliest deeds are those recorded in Gorges' province of Maine. In 1652 Massachusetts enforced her claim to southern Maine as far east as Casco bay, organizing this territory as Yorkshire or York county. Her jurisdiction was gradually extended eastward, and the charter of 1691 gave her the whole of modern Maine to the St. Croix river. All this was comprised in York county until Cumberland and Lincoln counties were set off in 1760.

Yorkshire naturalists' union.

The transactions of the Yorkshire naturalists' union. pt. 1– 1877–

Leeds [etc.] 1878–

pt. illus. (part col.) pl., maps, tables. 22½cm.

Parts 30-34 published at Hull.

The Transactions include papers in all departments of the Yorkshire fauna and flora, and are issued in annual parts containing signatures of the various sections (A-y); the groups are paged independently, and in the Library of Congress set they are bound according to their composition as volumes and not as originally issued. For convenience in identifying the parts, the contents given below are in two arrangements, first in the order of publication and second as monographs assembled from the parts. The covers of pt. 1–35, which contain much valuable bibliographical information concerning the set, are bound together in one volume. A record of this publication, with full contents of pts. 1–35 is given in T. Sheppard's Yorkshire's contribution to science, 1916, p. 123-124.
